Tuscany

The Super Tuscans...

After the World War II, the Chianti was known worldwide as being very accessible and quaffable. Chianti didn't imply snobbism or wealth, it was plenty easy to drink, but with the years its quality and image was decreasing a lot. In response to that, in the 70's, a handful of innovative and quality minded producers began taking the first steps toward making wines that would become the opposite of this "Spaghetti Chianti". They were definitely inspired by the Marquis Mario Incisa della Rochetta, owner of the estate Tenuta San Guido in Bolgheri, an area on the coast of Tuscany, who considered an artisan wine that broke every rule, Sassicaia. The vineyard was planted in what was then considered just about the worst possible location in Tuscany. The Cabernet vines were imported directly from Bordeaux and the wine was aged in French barriques. Every other in Tuscany was at the time aged in Slovenian Oak casks or worse, casks made from chestnut wood. Other producers followed suit by making expensive wines sometimes from Sangiovese blended with Cabernet Sauvignon, sometimes from either grape alone. These wines could not be defined Chiantis. In the eyes of law, they were considered mere table wines and it wasn't until later the number of Super Tuscans had increased considered mere table wines and it wasn't until later when the number of Super Tuscans had increased considerably that the IGT designation was invented.
